Battle of the Atlantic - The Royal Canadian Navy (RCN), in partnership with maritime units of the Royal Canadian Air Force (RCAF) and the Merchant Navy, played a pivotal role in ensuring that the sea lines of communications and logistics were maintained during the longest and most critical battle of the Second World War.

The RCN suffered 2210 fatalities and lost 24 warships. It destroyed or shared in the destruction of 33 U-Boats and 42 enemy surface vessels. HMCS SACKVILLE, K181, is the last surviving ship of her class from that significant period in Canadian history.

The ship is owned, maintained and operated by the volunteer Canadian Naval Memorial Trust in honour of all those who have served in our Naval Service, and in particular, in memory of those who made the supreme sacrifice. In 1985 HMCS SACKVILLE was designated Canada's Naval Memorial.

HMCS SACKVILLE Today - As the last surviving ship from the fleet of 269 Corvettes built during the Second World War, HMCS SACKVILLE's situation has changed in recent years. The Trust is now working in collaboration with the Maritime Museum of the Atlantic, Develop Nova Scotia (formerly the Waterfront Development Corporation Limited) and the Canadian Maritime Heritage Foundation for the creation of a Canadian Maritime Heritage District on the Halifax waterfront that will include the Maritime Museum of the Atlantic, HMCS SACKVILLE, CSS ACADIA, and a new Small Craft Centre.

At the same time, however, SACKVILLE's watertight integrity must be addressed to ensure that she can take full advantage of her place on the Halifax waterfront in the coming years. Specifically, the plan is to re-plate the 205-foot ship below the waterline with new 3/8 inch plate steel. The cost of such a project is in the order of $12,000,000. When the project is complete, HMCS SACKVILLE will be safe in the water for another 50 years plus.
